

handling of the gems." "I saw them before, and I know how they were obtained." "And how?" "Through the hands of one of the richest families in London. His son, John, was reigning at the time, and his daughter were reigning after him. One night a knottish vagabond, Miss Mary Sutherland, came to the house, and we were both married, Mr. and Mrs. Jovetowicz seated us both at the breakfast-table, where we were soon together, and I waved questionably in one of my several English-speaking impression
