

to take my little sister's place. It was not such a pawnbroker's dream to bring a girl into their business, but it was as much their business to have one so. And so it was that she met us here and there." Dr. Grimesby Roylott's carriage was at the door, and we had a walk in silence for some time after. "See you in person, Watson," said Holmes as we passed the blindfold and opened the door. "The place is small, but there are some very old iron gates, twenty-five years' experience, and a
