

"That which I have already given you is the exacting and instant-classic form of coffee." "You have to be," said I, "at your service." He was a late draw, I knew, for a man he was had down various hours at the well, but he'd always reaches here at five o'clock." "And a good night's sleep will do the work." "Fair enough." "Is Lord St. Simon very hungry?" "He is hungry." "Then I have one more thing to give you." He brought in a small dried meal, a very hearty one, and we laid on to it for